This culminated in the passage of The Agricultural Credit and Co-operative Bank Act, 1965 (Act 286) to incorporate a bank under that name. The name was changed to Agricultural Development Bank in 1967 under the National Liberation Council Decree (NLCD 182). The Decree also amended certain sections of the original Act to allow ADB to undertake the acceptance of deposits on current and savings accounts and transact banking business normally carried out by commercial banking institutions, including raising loans from foreign sources.

ADB is a universal bank offering a full range of banking products and services in retail, commercial, corporate and investment banking. Its business focus is universal banking with development focus.
